Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a zoom lens system, and more specifically to a small zoom lens system having a zoom ratio of at least 3 for use in photographic equipment such as a video camera, a digital still camera, a television camera, or a silver-film camera.

2. Description of the Prior Art Zoom lens systems having a zoom ratio of 3 or more, a wide angle of view of about 60 to 70 degrees, and a large aperture for use in photographic equipment such as a video camera, a digital still camera, a television camera, or a silver-film camera are known. For example, such a zoom lens system is disclosed in Japanese Laid-Open Patent Publication No. 2003-151180. Furthermore, zoom lens systems having a zoom ratio of about 3, a wide angle of view of about 60 degrees, a large aperture, a small size, and a low cost are required for photographic equipment such as a video camera, a digital still camera, a television camera, or a silver-film camera. and that it's not just because of education, then they really need to respond to that policy in some other way." Recalibration was the word Bindel used repeatedly during our conversation. She explained that as a member of the Equal Opportunities Commission, she's seen far more heterosexual sex offenders being reintegrated into the community than LGBTQ+ offenders. "All our research into the criminal justice reform process and back in 2004, when legislation came into being, there was very little legislative intent in the legislation to address [heterosexual sex offenders]," she said. "There was a huge outcry about the people that were being seen as offenders." The assessment was to see if there was a fit; but the focus of the amendment wasn't on the lack of fit, but the need to look at this from a human rights perspective. "The other thing we had to look at was if it was intended that people should be institutionalized for life, then there was no point having an assessment process, there was no point having a
